Conversations in Environmental Studies

A conversation with
Elizabeth Rush
Author of The Quickening and Rising

Oct. 2nd ♦ 4PM Herzstein Hall Room 212

Elizabeth Rush is the author of The Quickening: Creation and Community at the Ends of the Earth and Rising: Dispatches from the New American Shore, a finalist for the Pulitzer Prize. Central to Rush's writing practice is the act of listening: listening to those who live in front-line climate changed communities, listening to Antarctica's great glaciers as they go to pieces, listening to all those voices long locked out of environmental conversations. Her work explores fundamental questions: what does our disassembling world ask of us? How can we continue to live and love while also losing much? Join us for a conversation around writing, ethnography, and her new book.

This talk is presented with support from Rice's Center for Environmental Studies, the Walter Isle Memorial Fund, and the Rice Creative Writing Program's Cherry Reading Series.
